A lyrical, award-winning novel of women, weaving, and resilience — where tradition, love, and hidden wounds intertwine.

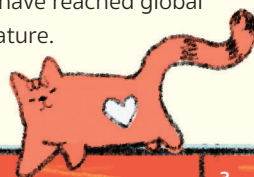

Weaving Wound follows three generations of Lanna women whose lives are bound to weaving the traditional sinh teen chok skirt. The intricate patterns on the fabric mirror their life stories—marked by scars, painful memories, and resilience. The novel’s title symbolizes these wounds as enduring reminders of hardship, seamlessly linking the art of weaving with the struggles of its characters. Beyond craft, the woven skirts embody the legacy of “female strength” passed down within the family.

The SEA Write Committee praised Prasertsak Padmarid’s novel for its vivid portrayal of three generations of Mae Chaem women, whose lives are intertwined with weaving. The loom becomes a powerful symbol of women’s space—negotiating gender, confronting prejudice, and preserving memory amid times of change.

Blending traditional literary conventions with innovative storytelling, Weaving Wound transforms the art of weaving into a symbolic language that drives the plot with depth and local color. The result is a profoundly moving novel that weaves together pain, resilience, and cultural heritage into humanity’s shared fabric.

Prasertsak Padmarid is an acclaimed Thai author and Winner of the 2024 SEA Write Award for his novel Weaving Wound.
